SNOW ON THE GROUND brings to mind hilarious sport on Union Hill. One mis-step and the chain reaction starts. Wonder what's the record of students swept off their feet in one plunge. . . . Another weather tip—when you're trudging to class and convinced you'll freeze on the way, remember that the weathermen say winters are getting milder!

Enameled copper jewelry seems to have been Santa's favorite gift this last holiday. Noticed some experiments being done with this sort of thing in craft classes, too. . . . More home economic points of interest—the attractive display cases near the first floor east and west drinking fountains. Eye-catching and informative—congratulations to their organizers!

Wonder if it's a new trend in reading interests expressed by such a large crowd attending the science fiction review at Books and Cokes last quarter. . . . If you're interested in a new reading experience, try the book entitled The Man Who Sold the Moon by Heinlein.

Have you discovered the unique French fashion magazines in the library? They feature design and fabric news. You can actually feel the fabrics from the REAL samples attached in each issue! . . . You can now replace your own worn-down leather heels without going to a cobbler. Look for the British produced kits.

They'll need more comfortable chairs in movie houses if customers have to swivel their necks to scan the new Panorama screens—another typical American invention going bigger, Bigger, BIGGER. . . . Talking about size, just how much bigger can cakes in magazine ads become? They're already so real looking, you reach for a plate and fork.

Another women's swipe from men—pocket protectors switched to a purse protector for powder puff. Will the males have anything they call all their own? . . . By actual count on a Friday night at the Union Grill door, 26 out of 50 gals were wearing little-boy shirts. Most of them with collar pins.

If the new year brings realization of added holiday pounds, scan through Watt's new book entitled First Book of Ballet. Has some terrific ideas for exercises with added graceful qualities included.
