

Hats Off To The ISU Veterinarian

We salute and commend the Veterinary Student Staff and Faculty Advisor of the Iowa State University Veterinarian for its excellent 50th Anniversary Edition commemorating its heritage, recording present events of students and faculty, and reporting current scientific knowledge of importance to the veterinary profession. It was the first veterinary student publication of its kind in the United States and first known as the Veterinary Student from 1938-1949, Iowa State College Veterinarian from 1950-1959, and Iowa State University Veterinarian from 1960 to date.

The names of this publication have historical significance, but one of the most valuable treasures found in this veterinary student publication is the rich heritage of our college that it has recorded for posterity from 1938 to the present. The first fifty years (1879-1929) of the History of ISU Veterinary Medicine was written by Dean C. H. Stange. The historians that chronicle the succeeding years of our history will rely heavily on the wealth of meaningful, pertinent, and vital information found in the ISU Veterinarian.

Today we pause and express our gratitude to two of our 1939 veterinary graduates, W. D. Daughtery - first editor and A. H. Seeley - first business manager, for initiating and causing the first veterinary student publication, Veterinary Student, in our college to become a reality in 1938. The wise counsel of faculty advisors, Drs. Fowler, Seaton, and Greve, has contributed significantly to the success of this student publication. During the past 50 years the vision, courage, intellectual capacity and hard work of numerous veterinary students have been responsible for the ISU Veterinarian being recognized as one of the Premiere Student Publications in the U.S. For the past 43 years it has been my pleasure to note that we have a very dynamic and productive student body. The faculty and our alumni are proud of your accomplishments and especially the positive effects of them on your College of Veterinary Medicine.
