Dr. and Mrs. Roach were injured near Cozad, Neb., while returning from their vacation trip in the West. Dr. Roach sustained several fractured ribs and both he and his wife were cut and bruised.

Dr. M. J. Johnson, Department of Veterinary Surgery, and Dr. E. F. Waller, Department of Veterinary Pathology, appeared on the program at both the North Dakota State Veterinary Meeting at Fargo, North Dakota, on June 23 and 24, 1940 and the Minnesota State Veterinary Meeting at the University of Minnesota, St. Paul, Minn. Dr. Johnson spoke on the "Surgical Diseases of the Head," and Dr. Waller reported on "Some Common Diseases of Poultry" at both of the meetings.

Over 100,000 hogs successfully immunized against cholera with
HOG CHOLERA VACCINES

THEY'RE "working"—in the field. While it is interesting to know that laboratory pigs treated with B. T. V. and Crystal Violet routinely withstand later injections of potent virus, of more practical interest to you is the fact that more than 100,000 pigs vaccinated to date have withstood field infection following their use.

Like serum-virus, these vaccines produce a solid immunity against hog cholera; but unlike serum-virus there are no "vaccination breaks," nor period of stunting due to animals being off their feed following immunization. Instead, there has been a marked reduction in losses from secondary infections such as pneumonia and enteritis; and, because there is no let-up on feeding, pigs usually reach the market well ahead of serum-virus treated animals.

Your clients will appreciate the opportunity to market that proportion of their pigs which sometimes fail to survive the usual immunization procedure.
